Kerr to Be Deputy Director Of Intelligence Organization

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16 (Reuters) — Robert Kerr, a career intelligence officer, has been named deputy director of Central Intelligence, the White House said Wednesday.

Mr. Kerr replaces Robert Gates, who was selected by President Bush to be the deputy to the White House National Security Adviser, Brent Scowcroft.

Mr. Kerr, a graduate of the University of Oregon, joined the Central Intelligence Agency in 1960. He has also served as associate deputy director for intelligence, deputy director for administration and director of the offices responsible for political analysis.
